

Taxi

By Nothere (original post)

Late one night at the bar the bar keep tells an old ghost story about a carriage driver who would appear to help stranded or people in a hurry. He would never charge for assisting them saying they could pay him later. Invariably they who accepted the ride died in a week.

That night or shortly after they realize they're late.

Rushing to the front of the hotel they are lucky enough to spot a cab leaving. Waving it down they realize they don't have their wallet, and ask the cabbie to wait. The cabbie gestures for them to get in. "It's not like I don't know where you're staying. You can pay me later."
