

The Eternal Game

By McCoy (original post)

As long as the hotel restraunt is open, two old men, one Black, one Jewish, set at a corner table with a chess board between them. They are both friendly and tolerant of interruptions, but as soon as their opponent moves the board will have their undivided attention. When the restraunt is closed, the board is left set up on the table.

No matter how long the PC's watch, they will never see a piece captured or hear the word "checkmate." They have been playing the same game for years if not decades.
