

Music Box Man

By 5lippers (original post)

One evening the players witness an anxious gentleman rush into the hotel and ask for a room for the evening. When told that the hotel is fully booked, the gentlemen becomes more agitated and says that he has to stay here because he has a really important meeting tomorrow! Reluctantly, the receptionist tells him that they do have a spare room. The room in question is 176 and the players are aware that this room has a dark and ugly reputation.

The man is slightly overweight, but otherwise non descript. He clutches a music box close to his chest. If the box is opened, the players will see a pirouetting ballerina which rotates in time to the music.

The following morning a woman turns up, asking after Music Box Man. He's not answering the door and the hotel staff have to let her into the room. The room is empty apart from the music box that sits on the bedside table. The woman takes the box, claiming that it was being delivered to her.

Opening the box will reveal that the box no longer contains a figurine of a ballerina, but that of a pirouetting old lady (possibly Bag Lady – see below). Come to think of it, the new owner of the music box looks very much like the ballerina in the box...
