

Repeating Alan

By Kyle A. (original post)

Everyday Alan does the EXACT same thing. The only variations are conversations with the PCs.

Every morning at 8:30 am Alan leaves his second story hotel room and walks to the elevator with the same newspaper under his left arm. Everyday he reaches the elevator just as the doors open and everyday he says, "Lucky me." At 8:33 am he sits down in the same chair and reads the paper until 9:02 AM, etc...

He never refers to anyone by name and always acts as if he's just meeting you. If you ask him about yesterday he says he just arrived in town and checked into the hotel last night. If the PCs move his chair or block his door and then watch to see what happens, someone will always walk in front of them or their attention will be drawn away and when they can see what they were watching, it will be back to how it was before they changed it.

None of the other hotel patrons remember him the next day.
